

Peak Heat : A Dystopian Anthology

Erisa Apantaku, Ck Hugo Chung, J J Green

December days that feel like Spring. Droughts that last for years. Rising ocean temperatures creating massive hurricanes and frequent El Niños. The Earth is changing. Scientists estimate Earth will reach Peak Heat within the next several decades, forcing massive changes to the way humans live. What those changes will look like, we can only speculate. Taipei Writers Group releases its third publication: Peak Heat, an anthology of dystopian stories dealing with the repercussions of a changing Earth pre-, during, or post- an apocalyptic global warming event. The stories range from optimistic, pessimistic, and pragmatic in each author's perception of what the future holds.
